READING COMPREHENSION

Read the passage and choose the correct answer (A, B, C or D) to each question.

The weekend is sacred. Saturday afternoon in particular is a time of migration from responsibility. Post office services and delivery do not exist on Saturday, and by noon nearly all shops, even news agents, are closed. Australia has entered the magic cave of leisure and will emerge with grumpy reluctance only at breakfast time on Monday. Even the counting of votes after a Saturday national election cannot conquer the Australian Sunday; from Saturday evening the explosive ballots lie around until Monday morning.

Students, bellwether of any culture, take off for the weekend as if books no longer existed and urban lives were a dream. Even in sophisticated Melbourne, campus tension evaporates on a Friday night as the great outdoors claim the weekend. Sydney and other cities are remote; nature-oriented pursuits hold sway by defaults. Students go bushwalking and bird-watching; they drive to the ski slope in northeastern Victoria; they play tennis or cricket under leafy trees; they put their heads down to the serious business of gardening. Year-round, their weekend has the laid-back feel of mid-summer weekends for youths in Boston or Paris or Tokyo.

In mid-summer, at Christmas, and New Year's, the nation virtually stops functioning. Not only do the politicians disappear and newspapers devote their columns to foods and drinks, and the odd report of a bushfire or a shark attacking a swimmer at the beach, but basic services also close down for days at the stretch.

An Australian will often cheerfully admit to being a bludger (a lazy one), whose hedonism is seldom loud or violent. He / She prefers a slow pace and is easy-going except when someone seeks to set a faster pace or behaves self-importantly.
